Accomplishments:

When hired to work at the Canadian Bibliographic Centre in 1951, there were three librarians but no books. Along with Martha Shepard and Jean Lunn, she was referred to as a founding mother. She developed the Canadiana acquisitions program and Canadian Authors File and was well-respected for her detective work in tracking down Canadian publications and Canadian authors, especially French-language authors. She represented Canadian Library Association in 1950 at the UNESCO Seminar at Malmö, Sweden and in 1958 was chairman of the Library Advisory Committee for the Brussels Universal and International Exhibition, 1958, for the Canadian Pavilion. A keen traveler, she also went to Sweden in the 1960s as a member of the Canadian delegation to a UNESCO seminar on libraries. She also traveled to Tunisia and Algeria as a library advisor, helping them to expand their national library services under a Ford Foundation grant. Following her retirement as Assistant National Librarian in 1969, she worked part-time cataloguing a special collection of pamphlets for the Public Archives of Canada.
