Comments:

Described as a "renaissance Woman" Freda Waldon's accomplishments were many spreading over three areas - Scholarship, contributions to the improvement of libraries and library services and for dedicated community service. As a professional and chief librarian she transformed the cataloguing system of the Hamilton Public Library and "she will be remembered for the expansion of branch libraries, for increased children's services, and the enhancing human resources for library staff." As a library administrator she transformed the Hamilton Public Library into a first rate resource in the areas of catalogue and its book collection." Before her retirement the collection was the fourth largest in a public library in Canada; circulation had grown to the third largest and a nation-wide reputation had been gained for the quality of the reference service offered." Her contributions to library service reached far beyond her own library in her services on the executive of the Ontario Library Association, her leadership as the first president of the Canadian Library Association and her contributions that lead to the development of the National Library of Canada. Her scholarship can be seen in the development of the monumental Bibliography of Canadiana, Published in Great Britain 1519-1763 which was prepared under a Carnegie Fellowship. A dedicated community worker, she took a leading role in adult education helping to found the Hamilton Recreation Council and the Hamilton branch of the Nation Film Forum She was also a founding member of the Women's Committee of the Art Gallery of Hamilton and Head-of-the-Lake Historical Society,
