Lawrence J. Burpee Medal Royal Society of Canada. Awarded to recognize an outstanding contribution or other achievement that greatly enhances the ability of the Society to fulfill its mission of making Canada better known on a national or international level, and/or contributes to the general advancement of geography.

Lawrence Burpee was a fervent supporter of many causes, from the need for a National Library in Ottawa to the independence of Poland. On the latter, he published a 1939 wartime article, "Poland's fight for freedom," in the Canadian Geographical Journal. On his way to Warsaw in 1946, he died in Oxford, England and is buried there. There is a memorial stone in Beechwood Cemetery, Ottawa where his wife, Maude Hanington Burpee, is buried.

"His literary output in books, pamphlets, and contributions to learned publications was extensive. His material was largely historical and geographical, and he wrote with special authority on all matters connected with the early exploration of Canada. Of a score of books he produced special mention may be made of his last work 'The Discovery of Canada,' the translation of which into French he was supervising in the last year of his life. His most widely read book is his 'Search for the Western Sea.'" — Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society of Canada, vol. 51, 1947
