Accomplishments/Honours:

1912 He created the Department of Agriculture's Publications Branch to collect and distribute information.

1913 He introduced the Agricultural Instruction Act and developed a new system of field inspection and tuber examination for potatoes which proved to create a large enough increase in quality to remove a stifling American embargo. As the Minister of Agriculture, he oversaw large scale agriculture growth during WW1 to feed Britain and Canada.

1915 He opened a government Publicity division.

1915 In February, he represented Canada at the opening of the Panama Exhibition.

1916 Martin was badly injured in the fire that destroyed much of the Center Block of the Parliament buildings. He resigned from his post as Minister of Agriculture in 1917 partially due to the injuries.

1919 He was chosen as the government representative to accompany the Prince of Wales on his Trans-Canada tour.

1931 At the League of Nations meeting, Geneva, he was voted a 'living allowance.'

1938 At his funeral, on March 23, William Lyon Mackenzie King was an honorary pall bearer, as were Arthur Meighen and R.B. Bennett.

Comments:

1886 He married Sara B. Armstrong.

From the New York Times obituary: "He was a popular speaker and was sought persistently by societies, institutions and organizations of varied nature. He was considered a cultured and entertaining writer and kept a kindly eye out for Canadian writers of promise..."

1933 A diary entry on September 13 by William Lyon Mackenzie King refers to Martin Burrell as a "social snob of the first order." (He is present in numerous diary entries, often complimentary.)

He was the first farmer to become a Minister of Agriculture.

He wrote a weekly literature column, 'Literature and Life,' for the Ottawa Journal from 1924-1938.

Mr. Burrell died in office in 1938 and was not replaced until 1944. As General Librarian at the time of Mr. Burrell's death, Félix Desrochers became the de facto Parliamentary Librarian during the intervening six years.
